The hall ends, but on either side of the corridor are multiple open doors, so short that you'll have to duck down to pass through them. A sign above these doors labels them as entrances to evacuation pods.

Screaming, everyone in your group runs to the pods. In the mad dash to be first, a desperate few shove the people around them out of the way. No one bothers to check if anyone else needs help. Instead, they immediately claim their seats and strap themselves in. The doors on the occupied pods quickly seal shut, and you hear a loud "thump" as each pod is ejected.

A mere thirty seconds later, you find yourself standing alone in the hall. No, you realize, you're standing next to a young human girl. She's staring ahead, her eyes huge, and gnawing on a thumbnail. She can't be any older than twelve.

You glance around, looking for her parents. That's when you notice that there's only one pod left. Not only that, but there's only room in the pod for one person.

- Put the child in the evacuation pod.
- Get into the evacuation pod yourself.

The detective ignores you. "Now since that time, you've been taken onto the vessel Lady Luck, captained by a man named Isan Cehnta. The name just rolls off your tongue, doesn't it?" Garce chuckles. "Anyway, this ship specializes in what you might call the 'retrieval business.' But we both know what it really is—a pirate ship. More importantly, I don't think you have what it takes to be part of that kind of operation. Am I right?"

- "I love being a part of the crew."
- "I couldn't care less about the crew."
- "I hate the crew and can't wait to get away from them."

Your sense of self-preservation pays off; the corridor is lined with multiple small doors, and a sign labels them as entrances to escape pods. But the doors are closed. Your stomach drops. They wouldn't be closed if the pods hadn't already been launched.

Your hands ball into fists—this isn't fair!—until you realize there's one door still open. One pod still intact. Grinning so hard your cheeks ache, you stride toward the aperture. You knew you were going to make it.

You're almost there when a flash of movement registers at the corner of your vision. Looking up, you see a young girl, no older than twelve. Her watery eyes are huge, and she's gnawing on her thumbnail.

Your gaze swivels disbelievingly from her to the pod. Who left her here? Then you notice there's only room in the pod for one person.

- Put the child in the evacuation pod.
- Get into the evacuation pod yourself.

You greet the captain, and he nods almost imperceptibly. "We're returning to Tuskin," he says, not moving from his position near the window. "After what happened on Jeeq, I think we could all use some time to recover." he turns to face you, and his eyes are dark with regret. "Kraska's betrayal devastated us all. I should've seen it coming, should have known better. But I was stupid. I had my eyes set on the treasure...on profit. We only survived because of dumb luck...and because of you. This disaster of a mission—it's all my fault."

- "It's completely your fault. You should be ashamed of yourself."
- "What happened was everyone's fault. We all agreed to the mission, and we're all to blame."
- "No one's at fault for what happened. No one, that is, but Kraska."

A fun game, imo. I've always been a fan of the Choice Of games, and this one didn't disappoint. They really do a good job of diverse player choices that will eliminate options later on in the game if you aren't careful in your decisions. Some scenes do have you run in a circle until you make the right choice to progress, but that only happened to me once or twice in the overall game. I've only played through it once, but I'll definitely try different paths to see the different endings.. Not bad, But i'm not recommending it because this game doesn't have a ending. No real romance, odd choices making you going in circles, having to pick sides on the crew small was wierd. I'm holding any real feedback. Hopefully it continues.
